

Text-dependent questions

SAY

Let's remember that critical readers and writers look closely at stories and use this information in their thinking, discussions, and writing. As critical readers, thinkers, and writers, we are going to read different stories to learn information about this guiding question: How can I understand my feelings and thoughts when I experience different things in my life? As we read the anchor texts in this unit, let's think of information or ideas we can learn from the text that will help us answer this guiding question.

DO

Re-read the story. Then, complete the third step of the Close Reading process 3. Use annotations and text-dependent questions to collect information and check student understanding.

SAY

Remember that the central message or lesson is something that you can learn from the story from the way the characters react and treat other people. Think about this text-dependent question: What is the central message or lesson of the story? Use key details and evidence from the story to support your thinking. Close your eyes and massage your brains and think about your answer. What is the central message or lesson of the story? Use key details from the story evidence to support your thinking. Be ready to share with a partner. Turn to the person next to you (different from our last session) and take turns sharing your thinking.

Lesson 5

DO

Listen as students share to assess students ability to recount or describe key ideas or details from a text read aloud or information presented orally or through other media.

SAY

This was awesome information! Let's go back to the text and annotate the evidence we have to support our thinking.

DO

Model for students how to connect their retelling of the story to evidence from the text.

Open-ended response

DO

Complete the fourth step of the Close Reading process 4. Use openended responses to check for student understanding of text and how information from this text supports their thoughts on the unit's big ideas/guiding question.

SAY

Think about this text-dependent question: What is the central message or lesson of the story? Use key details from the story and evidence to support your thinking. Use your Retelling Graphic Organizer to draw pictures of the key details in the beginning, middle, and ending of the story.

Lesson 5

Rotate and support student thinking with probing questions like:

- What are you drawing about the story?
- What did the text tell you?
- What is the central message or lesson?

DO

Provide support to students as needed and allow students to dictate responses to the teacher (write student words below each of their drawings for the story).
